

The attack on the unarmed marchers became known as “Bloody Sunday” led to national fury and caused President Lyndon Johnson to personally guarantee the marchers protection. The Voting Rights Act was passed a few months later

In 1963, MLK decided to target Birmingham, Alabama as it was one of the most racially divided cities in America. King used boycotts and non-violent sit-ins to make his point. The police responded with violence, using high pressure water hoses and attack dogs on the students and children that attended.

In 1968 King had been giving a speech to black workers encouraging them to fight for better wages. While King was on the balcony of his hotel room a white racist named James Earl Ray shot him through the cheek, he died in hospital an hour later..

In December 1955 Rosa Parks was arrested. This sparked the Montgomery bus boycott which lasted a year. Martin Luther King was one of the main organisers of the boycott.

The death of King led to an enormous amount of violence and race riots that lasted for days. However, King’s legacy of peaceful protest stood the test of time and inspired people all over the world.

In 1965 MLK organised three peaceful marches from Selma to Montgomery, an area of 15,000 Black Americans where only 200 could vote. The police violently attacked protesters and refused to let them continue the march.

In 1963 King joined with other Civil Rights leaders to march on the US capital, Washington DC 250,000 turned up and 50,000 were white. During this protest King delivered his famous “I have a dream” speech.

The boycott was a huge success and showed how powerful Black Americans could be.

It showed the effectiveness of peaceful protest and boycotts and it launched the career of Martin Luther King.

The violent response of the police shocked the country and after a month of protests the city of Birmingham backed down, promising to end segregation.

MLK became a legend after this campaign and was made TIME Magazines Man of the Year.

The massive protest got huge media attention and showed how powerful the Civil Rights movement was. It had a big effect on the government and a few months later they passed the Civil Rights Act 1964 which made discrimination against skin colour illegal.
