"Purgatory is hypocritical to the notion of a just God"

Evaluate this statement, giving reasons for and against. Refer to Christian teachings. Refer to a different Christian perspective. Reach a justified conclusion.

The idea of Purgatory is exceptionally hypocritical to the notion of a just God, as a fair God would punish and reward based on human action, not simply because they've repented. Protestant Churches completely reject the existence of purgatory, and claim it is repugnant in Article 39. This is a valid reason as it 'grounded upon no warranty of scripture', meaning that it is not even written in the Bible, thus supporting the point that it must be hypocritical due to it not being the word of God.

However, Catholics would argue that it is not hypocritical, and actually further supports the idea of a 'just' God, as he is merciful to sinners and is willing to give repentant sinners a second chance. This is exemplified in the quote stated by Jesus at his crucifixion 'Father forgive them'. This is an invalid argument however as this may suggest that God may even forgive murdered and give them a chance to enter heaven with 'no sin, sadness, or suffering', therefore making it remarkably unjust that criminals will spend eternity with those who have never sinned.
