Extract 1: Adapted from 'Animal Farm', Chapter 7

The knoll where they were lying gave them a wide prospect across the countryside. They could see the long pasture stretching down in front of them, the spinney, and the mowed fields where the young grass was thick and green. It was a clear spring evening. The grass and the bursting hedges were gilded by the level rays of the sun. Never had the farm appeared to the animals so desirable a place.
