

Communism vs Capitalism

Apple in a Capitalist society

The businessmen and women who own shares in Apple will make a lot more money than the software engineers and Apple Store workers who are employed by the company. The owners of Apple can decide how much people pay for their products.

Apple in a Communist society

The people of the society would all own Apple together under one big state (government). This means in theory that the Apple Store workers would be paid the same wage as the specialists who make the products and the businessmen and women who market them to the public. The state would fix prices for Apple products that could not be changed by the company.
